The hot air trapped inside the phone booth seem to thicken into a steamy cloud that fills your lungs with sticky moisture. You struggle to catch your breath as sweat rolls down your brow and tension pulses in your temples.

Innocent people might die in this dangerous game if you don't do something about it. You've gotta think quick to get yours. As the weight of the world settles on your shoulders, the clock strikes a quarter past midnight.

- I tell her no. She hasn't killed me yet, and I just might get what I want out of the deal.
- Agree like I always have. If I simply deliver and don't ask questions—for now—The Bull might return the favor and give me my freedom.
- A commission to take down The Pitt, and then maybe a one-on-one with The Bull? My plans are already coming together.
